

LOOKING BACK

On this date in ...

1914: While the Schenectady County District Attorney's Office still believed the body parts found weeks before in the Mohawk River belonged to a woman named Eva Kalenska. The police department disagreed, partially based on the conflicting reports about whether either the body or Kalenska had gold teeth.

1964: Armbro Doc went wire-to-wire, streaking the final quarter to win its third in a row in A division of the $3,000 Fort Plain Pace at Saratoga Raceway. Howard Parker handled the gelding, who now had six wins in eight appearances.

1989: The first "pavement recycling train" to roll in the north-eastern United States would be chewing up decaying roads in rural Albany County this summer and leave behind a new highway. Gorman Brothers Inc. of Albany planned to run the 45-yard-long train of equipment along Picard Road in the town of New Scotland and Fancher Road in the town of Westerlo. The pavement recycling train would eat up about 3 inches of old pavement on these roads.

► Want to read more about the Capital Region's past? Have any memories or thoughts about how our history relates to today's events? See <http://blog.timesunion.com/history/>

<http://alb.merlinone.net/mweb/wmsql.wm.request?oneimage&imageid=27737775>

LOOKING BACK

On this date in ...

1914: While the Schenectady County District Attorney's Office still believed the body parts found weeks before in the Mohawk River belonged to a woman named Eva Kalenska. The police department disagreed, partially based on the conflicting reports about whether either the body or Kalenska had gold teeth.

1964: Armbro Doc went wire-to-wire, streaking the final quarter to win its third in a row in A division of the $3,000 Fort Plain Pace at Saratoga Raceway. Howard Parker handled the gelding, who now had six wins in eight appearances.

1989: The first "pavement recycling train" to roll in the northeastern United States would be chewing up decaying roads in rural Albany County this summer and leave behind a new highway. Gorman Brothers Inc. of Albany planned to run the 45-yard-long train of equipment along Picard Road in the town of New Scotland and Fancher Road in the town of Westerlo. The pavement recycling train would eat up about 3 inches of old pavement on these roads.

Want to read more about the Capital Region's past? Have any memories or thoughts about how our history relates to today's events? See <http://blog.timesunion.com/history/>